

2024 APN ASSEMBLY

Collective Freedom From Collective Struggles

MONDAY 4TH - FRIDAY 8TH NOVEMBER VICTORIA FALLS, ZIMBABWE

Acknowledgments

We extend our gratitude to the APN Membership for all their insights and invaluable contributions.

We acknowledge the guidance of the board of directors, the dynamic advisory planning team comprising of selected APN member organizations, and youth leaders from across the continent. The 2024 APN Assembly would not have been possible without solidarity and unwavering support from all Assembly participants, our partners and friends.

Lastly, we thank our sponsors for their invaluable financial support.

On Day 1, we will examine the relationship between philanthropy policy and practice. If enabling policies are necessary building blocks, then only by realising them into practice will we begin to build just and fair societies. As we re-assess the nexus between policy and practice, how do we continue to foster symbiosis between the two? These discussions will reflect on African philanthropy's potential to drive systemic change, and examine how actors could work together to celebrate and own indigenous practices as distinctly African and thus relevant to reshaping future philanthropy, as well re-imagine practices for contemporary application.

12:30-13:30	Community Dialogues 4:	These sessions, participants will take a deeper reflection on issues of concern, suggest concrete actions, effective strategies and the cocreated solutions for collective response.
	4A:	Turning the Tide: Intersecting Realities in Climate Justice
	Description:	Local communities and marginalized groups play an instrumental role in climate change adaptation solutions, yet they remain systematically under-represented in climate governance. How do we turn the tide? How to enable gender-transformative and locally-led climate adaptation action for good? The session will generate a dialogue on key levers with the highest potential to bridge the gap between global commitments and national/local practices, to empower the collective agency of local communities and marginalized groups to be change agents, policy influencers and custodians of natural resources and to confront current inequities in climate finance, governance structures and social norms.

	Host(s):	ACTIVE, People and Wildlife Africa, CASA Socio-Environmental Fund, APN Youth
	Room:	Kalala
	4B:	Disability Politics
	Description:	Disability politics and inclusion alert us to the ways that discriminatory policies shape our environment, and are reflected on social attitudes and stigmas. It reminds us that people living with disability are only impaired as far as policy is not inclusive. This session will discuss and highlight effective practices and the challenges of amplifying gender equity and equality in disability inclusion. With a disability lens, the participants will explore the symbiosis between

There is a general failure to tap into resources, which is indispensable for the resilience of civil society and development in Africa. Few countries have progressive tax incentives and discouraging legal requirements for mobilising resources. This session will focus on regulatory frameworks that affect the growth of philanthropy including the recently released AfCFTA protocol on Women and Youth in Trade. 	4D:	Own Your Power: Who is Really in Charge?
	Description:	Traditional power structures, rooted in historical, cultural, and institutional frameworks, have long played a significant role in perpetuating social inequities. Governmental bodies, economic systems, religious institutions, and social hierarchies maintain and reinforce disparities based on race, gender, class, and other social categories. This has contributed to ineffective participation of the community in decision making. This session will focus on understanding power dynamics' role in community participation and agency. How is power routinely lost or abused in African communities? What does new power look like?

Day Two: Knowledge Production

Day 2 is about knowledge production and the stories we tell ourselves about African philanthropy. How much do indigenous insights and wisdoms contribute to our research, methods of analysis, decision making and doing? We will also examine the use of language, both our native tongues /vernacular as well as rhetoric in furthering or hindering meaningful participation of community as rightful investors in their development. We will explore key questions including: how can philanthropy counter inequalities and power imbalances? And how can we build solidarity towards narratives that showcase African philanthropy as a relevant driver of community-led transformation?

	Plenary 6:	Ignite Talk: Decolonizing Knowledge & Centering African Wisdom by Brian Kagoro, Managing Director of Programs at the Open Society Foundations.
	Description:	This session will explore the importance of and contribution of wisdom in the context of African philanthropy and adaption actions for narrative building. It will look at the challenges and opportunities for an African minded approach and interrogate where ecosystems complement or fail to incorporate the existing efforts and initiatives of the indigenous communities. What narratives/stories are we telling ourselves about ourselves by decentring our own indigenous wisdoms?

		roadmap for collective response.
	7A:	The Disruptive Role of Truth Tellers in Our Communities
	Description:	This session will contemplate the role of the disruptors in development today. Actors like media practitioners and artists have historically chronicled the truth of life even when it has been dangerous. How do we maintain the disruptive potential of these industries? How can we shift towards a collaborative relationship with these practitioners for the success of our shared value in collective freedom.

		Wisdoms and philosophies like sharing collective joys and burdens with those we are in community, which are realized through practices like pooled resources, crowdfunding for weddings, burials and other communal rituals. There is a need to closely examine founding and indigenous models and ways of knowing, and reintegrate them into our conceptualization of community-led development interventions.

	7C:	Feminism as an Approach for Interrogating Power Dynamics and Crisis Response
	Description:	African feminism centres indigenous ways of knowing that encourage collectivism. It refuses subjugation as the norm and is critical of how power is wielded. This session will explore and build on the significant impact and collective power of pan-African & feminist philanthropies, especially during crises like pandemics, national conflicts and the rise of the anti-gender movement that has continued to be more visible with discourse and actions in opposition to the concept of gender, in the social, political and legal context, as well as the increase in opposition to the led Development Africa is home to over 3000 languages. The top ten most spoken languages being Amharic, Berber, Oromo, Igbo, Yoruba, Hausa, French, Swahili and English. English is undoubtedly the most dominant.

		All these affects knowledge we produce in various ways. In this community dialogue we will be sharing experiences and reflecting on key questions, i.e., What is the function of language (both mother tongue and rhetoric) in development? How do we incorporate diversity and inclusion via language in our social justice work? How do we name and challenge harmful power dynamics? How do we interrogate the influence of colonialism in development language?

Day Three: Movement Building

Day 3 is about movements; purposeful organising towards a collective vision for the liberation of African communities. We will share experiences on how movements are responding and directing resources where they are needed the most, and are driving social and systems change. Intervening in the power dynamics that shape how resources are mobilized, distributed and utilized. We will examine what fosters a relevant, resilient and genuinely impactful movement, what solidarity for movements by people we are in community with looks like, and how to mobilise for and with movements without co-opting or losing a movement's integrity.

	11A:	The Role and Power of Informal Philanthropy in Movement Building
	Description:	Across the continent, social movements are rising to tackle the challenges like natural disasters, climate change, political violence shrinking civic spaces. The urgency of these crises demands rapid action, far beyond the sluggish pace of international aid. So, if international aid isn't stepping up fast enough, who is really funding these movements on the front lines? And are these funders recognized enough to continue to incentivize their giving?
	Host(s):	Global Fund for Community Foundations, Kenya Community Development Fund, STAR Ghana Foundation
	Room:	Kalala
	11B:	Learning from Survivor-Led Communities
	Description:	This session will discuss the approaches, types of support services including resources and partnerships most valued by survivor leaders to support their collective struggle for social justice. It will also seek to understand challenges including leadership, resourcing, organizing, safety and security, mental health, wellness and healing, legal representation and movement infrastructure, such as safety housing as some of the challenges they face.

	11C:	Shifting the Power: Transforming Funding Relationships in Development.
	Description:	Development has often happened to people living in the Global South, not local partners, creating a cycle of short-term fixes rather than lasting solutions. The concept of "Shifting the Power" challenges business as usual, exploring new ways of deciding and doing that are people-cantered.

		This session will explore what it looks like to upturn traditional power structures in funding relationships, the challenges in navigating funding structures; while maintaining core principles and integrity, the gains that indicate real progress, and the work that is still needed to achieve Description:	We no longer have the luxury of working in silos. How do we ensure open dialogue across planes; i.e., with the government, private markets, and community-led institutions? This session will explore "necessary" alignment for the advancement of African communities. It serves as a safe space to connect and build a consensus on how best to define and implement the desired balance between development stakeholders in the pursuit of achieving equitable development. For instance, how private sector agility and innovation can be a critical catalyst to accelerate efforts to tackle systemic challenges. The session will also delve into the key ingredients
